Why It Is Essential To Know How To Stop Physical Bullying

By Eliza Mendoza

The potential effects of bullying on children and young adults who are being bullied include things like deteriorating academic performance and ill health. Although there are many other reasons why a child could start experiencing poor performances in school, the aspect of being bullied is certainly one of them. Guardians and parents should know how to stop physical bullying among the children and young adults.

Regardless of the age of a bully and the victim of the behavior, this issue has to be tackled intuitively. A child who is being bullied has a psychological mental problem where he or she cannot concentrate in class work. The victim feels demoralized and reaped off the passion to pursue academic work.

The children feel that the bullies could further continue attacking them when they discover that the issues that been reported to teachers or parents. This however, does not have to happen and children who are mistreated by their peers should seek help from the older persons. Keeping silent only makes the matter worse, and it could lead to problems that are more serious.

The more the bullied remains silent, the more he or she continues to suffer physically, emotionally, mentally, and psychologically. Due to the constant fear and threat of being hurt or harmed, children and young adults may develop behaviors such as keeping off school. Parents and guardians as well as teachers should understand the behaviors of their pupils and students.

The moment the issue is discussed with the parents and teachers, sound measures can be taken to approach the aggressor and influence him or her do away with that behavior. Surprisingly, some of the bullies do so without understanding the pain and anguish they are causing to their peers and friends. In addition, such a behavior makes the bully feel satisfied, though in the wrong way.

Children who are bullied may also develop other effects such as showing aggression just like the bullies. This may be dangerous because it could lead to confrontation between the bullied and the bully. Others may turn their anger and frustrations inward, and they become self-destructive. This situation may lead to other problems like substance abuse.

Children, who taunt from school because they are experiencing problems such as, dinner being taken away by bullies, may be misunderstood by parents and teachers. The parents or teachers may think that such children are not serious about their studies or they are just trying to be rude. However, deep inside the heart and soul of those children is a state of suffering, weakness, hopelessness, and fear of attacks.

It is important that teachers, parents, and guardians understand the behaviors of their children. However, parent and teachers sometimes do not seem to understand how to interpret the behaviors of children and pupils. This makes it difficult to know how to stop physical bullying and save children who are suffering from exposure to the bullies.
